

Dear Sir/madam,

When I was young, conditions like Dyslexia, ADHD and Autism were not recognised by staff at school, and it must have been tough for children, teachers, and parents. Even today, there are so many young people struggling with them. Sadly, there are few experienced therapists and specialists available to detect and analyse their symptoms. Statistics confirm that it can take up to 3 years for diagnosis at this time.

We at Addhere Technologies have invested over 10 years, developing a unique, secure, and highly accurate application to analyse ADHD quickly and accurately in children and adults. Independent studies confirm results as high as 80 percent compared to conventional methods which are generally around 60 percent.

We want to bring our solution to the UK's education market, but we need your help. To make sure our technology is easy to use, is as accurate as possible, and brings positive results to all concerned, we need to engage with ten schools for a free of charge evaluation over a six-month period before a product launch in the UK. Training and support will also be free of charge and the entire process will be secure and help all who participate.

Will you help us, your students, teachers, and parents in this most important and valuable evaluation process? If so, please reply to this email with the single word 'Yes' and we will contact you to demonstrate how we can work together for the benefit of everyone concerned.

Kindest regards
Daniel Carvalho Melo